of cold air by the wind. Natural wind and fans are the two most common sources of forced convection. Convection coefficient,  $h$ , is the measure of how effectively a fluid transfers heat by convection. It is measured in  $W/m^2K$ , and is determined by factors such as the fluid density, viscosity, and velocity.

currents. The Ekman surface current or wind drift current depends upon the speed of the wind, its constancy, the length of time it has blown, and other factors. In general, however, wind drift current is about 2 percent of the wind speed, or a little less, in deep water where the wind has been blowing steadily for at least 12 hours. 3103.
